

A few guys are chatting and one talks about how he was at a party the night before and about his interaction with a girl. She wore sexy clothes and smiled at him a lot. When she went to the bathroom away from the rest of the party, he slapped her ass. He said “she asked for it!”

---

A group of people are talking. “I got cat called on my way home from work today. A guy yelled out his window to take my top off. Boys will be boys.” (Excusing inappropriate behavior)

---

In the workplace at lunch, someone was telling sexually explicit jokes. Two of the co-workers felt uncomfortable but didn’t want to say anything because the person telling the jokes was their supervisor.

--

Someone shared that a woman at a party was being inappropriate. “It wasn’t so bad. She only said a few sexual comments. Yeah, they were inappropriate but at least she didn’t touch anyone, so it’s not a big deal. Pick your battles I guess.” (Tolerance of sexual harassment)

---

Someone said “I heard that rape really doesn’t happen that often. It’s mostly just women who are mad and are just making things up.” (Inflating false rape report statistics)

---

A bunch of roommates are getting ready to go out. One guy says to another “You better find someone tonight and pick up a chick. Score time!” He turns to a female roommate and says “Maybe you’ll get picked up tonight. You look great. Someone might choose you if you’re lucky.” (Defining “manhood” as dominant and sexually aggressive, Defining “womanhood” as submissive and sexually passive)